I was given the 2016 version as a gift and I really loved it. i wanted next years so i purchased this one for myself. This version is just as good, it looks like it has more information on stones than recipes this time which I appreciate because I collect stones and many of the recipes were not useful to me due to dietary constraints. The plastic spiral binding isn't the best in the world but at least its not wire that catches on everything. Eventually one end broke off but it was easily manageable and the thing really took a lot of abuse in my bag before that happened. There is no monthly calendar spread. The days are not lined and they are set up with one week between two pages. Monday through Friday is on the left and on the right there is a picture or a passage (on an upcoming holiday/event/moon or a stone/ritual/recipe) with Saturday and Sunday below it. Some days have random little tips about incenses, stones, other materials, I've even seen some about the moon and gods/goddesses. There are symbols that mark whether it's a planting day or harvesting day, it also gives daily information on the moon phases, sun signs, color of the day, etc. You can see an example of the weekly spreads if you click "look Inside" on the photo of the cover and go towards the end of the preview.

Love love this calendar ... I bought this last year and it NEVER ceases to amaze me . It's a little reference in a calendar :)

I get this every year. Great size and the style, weekly days, is great to write notes on. I love the spiral notebook style.

I get this every year because I love the recipes and the history thrown in and the articles and artwork. You can't go wrong with this.

Granted I purchased a super early for next year. These calendars always are helpful to me and my family.

The contents are, as always, excellent. I prefer Jennifer Hewitson's illustrations.

love this datebook... good size... lots of ideas to make, bake or create...

another great year to come. can't do without my datebooks
